You've survived the dreary and cold nights and you're ready to celebrate the first day of 2020. Even though you've already finished making that "To do list" for next year, chances are that you're still thinking about New Year's resolutions. While many people decide to make some sort of resolution for the new year, the odds are that they have failed miserably by the end of February. Sometimes, New Year's resolutions are too much to handle. They are, after all, complex, difficult, and they take a lot of self-control to stick to. Many people think that their resolution for 2020 has failed because it is too much to handle or they didn't do well. If you decide that it's time to give up on your New Year's resolution, take heart, as others have experienced the same thing before you. Below are some tips on how to stop new year's resolutions from failing. If you still decide to set your resolution, remember that you have some tricks up your sleeve. Tip 1. Keep It Simple, Keep It Honest Starting a New Year's resolution takes a lot of self-control. You might think that you can resolve to do something like take up swimming, but that can prove to be quite difficult. For those who have done well with a New Year's resolution in the past, it helps to keep it simple. Start with one or two things that you know you can stick to. If you resolve to take up jogging, pick out a couple of days in the week where you will fit in a jog. Include breakfast as a part of the routine. You'll find that it doesn't get more simple than that. As for your resolutions for the new year, make them simple and honest. No one expects you to go from couch potato to marathon runner in the first week of 2020. Choose resolutions you know you'll be able to stick to. If you can du tool is using a command-line interface. `du -ksh | awk '{print $5}' | sort -n` A: As mentioned in the comments, you can use du. I would suggest you to have a look at the command du, available as a sub-command of ls or cd. That said, in this (source) specific case, it seems you want to display the sizes of the files within a directory. Thus, it's better to use the file command. In your case, it's `ls -lR | file -i -- * | tee | du -sh` More info here. Q: Activating a button from another I have a problem activating a button from another. There are 3 classes, two of them are called in the activity and the third one is called in the first one. The first class looks like this `public class myActivity extends Activity implements OnClickListener` and it is called in the other classes and so: `myActivity.setOnClickListener(this);` And the second one looks like this: `public class registerType extends Activity { protected void onCreate(Bundle savedInstanceState) { super.onCreate(savedInstanceState); setContentView(R.layout.registerType); myLayout = (Button)findViewById(R.id.ID); myLayout.setOnClickListener(new OnClickListener() { @Override public void onClick(View v) { Intent intent = new Intent(`
