Effects of Histone Deacetylase Inhibitors on Chromatin Architecture and Gene Expression. Histone deacetylase (HDAC) inhibitors are widely used for cancer therapy. In particular, treatment with HDAC inhibitors causes apoptosis and activates an antitumor immunity, in addition to the anti-proliferative effects. Recently, small molecules have been developed as potent HDAC inhibitors and HDAC inhibitors have been used for studies of nuclear architecture. Subtelomeric regions, including Sy-type repetitive sequences, are characterized by a distinct chromatin architecture and dynamic change in gene expression. Telomere-associated genes, such as telomerase, are also found to be regulated by the chromatin architecture and gene expression. Recently, small molecules have been developed as potent HDAC inhibitors that bind to the nucleosome surface and interact with specific nucleosomes. One of these inhibitors, PS-53, is particularly effective at inducing sub-nuclear foci formation. These foci have a distinctive architecture, which consists of G-quadruplex DNA associated with nucleosomes. In this chapter, we introduce the application of HDAC inhibitors for studies of the nuclear architecture and the molecular mechanisms of telomere regulation. This chapter provides a useful tool for understanding the transcriptional control of gene expression in the subnuclear region.

A. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to the separation and fixation of colloidal particles and particles in the submicron size range from a fluid. The separation of colloidal particles in the submicron size range from a fluid is a longstanding problem in the art, and the present invention is directed to a process for the isolation of such colloidal particles, specifically individual gold or silver particle. More specifically, the present invention relates to the efficient and low cost capturing of colloidal particles and particles in the submicron size range from a fluid, e.g. water.

B. Description of the Prior Art U.S. Pat. No. 4,091,027 discloses a process for the detection of enzyme catalyzed hydrogen peroxide production. In this process, a water sample which may contain colloidal particles and particles in the submicron size range is added to the enzyme and is placed in an ultrasonic bath for a period of time to facilitate ultrasonic dispersion of the colloidal particles and particles in the water sample. The ultrasonic bath also increases the temperature of the water sample, an increase in temperature which may be harmful to
