Using Photoshop CS6 Photoshop CS6 is the latest version of Adobe Photoshop. Although the upgrades and new features are many, the key difference between CS6 and previous versions of Photoshop is that it changes the workspace to a Windows 8–like interface. Unlike other versions of Photoshop, you must install CS6 on top of Windows 8 in order to create graphics, which can slow down computer operation. The Windows 8 capability also makes it difficult to add more than one Photoshop document (page) open at once. Photoshop CS6 also has a new feature called Content-Aware Fill, which is similar to a feature in the popular photo-editing program GIMP. Even though you can also use GIMP's Content-Aware Fill feature, you must first pay for a subscription to the GIMP Shop if you want to buy the feature. (A subscription costs approximately $40 a year.) After adding the feature, if you attempt to use it on a photo you have already edited in CS6, the Content-Aware Fill feature adds the color of the background to the foreground. (A good example is to use the feature to remove the background from a photo.) Some people choose to use Adobe Photoshop Express instead of Photoshop CS6. Photoshop Express is a free mobile application for editing images on your iPhone, iPad, or Android-based device. One of the advantages of Photoshop Express over using Photoshop is that you can organize your images as you take them, thereby reducing the likelihood of losing a photo. Although Photoshop Express is a nice editing tool, you can't share the images you edit on Photoshop Express and you can't buy color correction tools. The following steps explain how to use Photoshop CS6. 1. Launch the application. In Windows, click the Photoshop CS6 icon in your Start menu. In a Mac, click the Several muscarinic acetylcholine receptors (mAChRs) have been cloned, and each subtype of mAChR appears to be involved in many physiological and pathophysiological processes. However, the subcellular localization of each mAChR subtype remains to be elucidated. In this study, we localized M2 mAChR by a combination of immunohistochemistry and super-resolution imaging of M2 mAChR-expressing cells. In the mouse brain, M2 mAChR immunoreactivity was observed in the granular layer of the olfactory bulb, the ependymal layer of the subventricular zone, and the subgranular zone of dentate gyrus. In the hypothalamic arcuate nucleus, M2 mAChR was localized to a subset of magnocellular oxytocin and vasopressin neurons, while no immunoreactivity was observed in the lateral septum. In the cerebellum, M2 mAChR immunoreactivity was observed in a subset of Purkinje cells and basket cells, but not in granule cells. Thus, we observed that in addition to the diffuse localization of M2 mAChR
