Queens, New York (CNN) On a screen in the cramped lobby of a midtown office building, a video plays of Ronald Smith waving to his mother -- cradled in a wheelchair -- from prison, from a distance. He talks about wishing she would have cancer. This was his mother's first time seeing the video. In a few hours, she will be at a news conference with her son, a young man whose life of crime started with a cupcake. Smith, 22, of Queens was arrested in 2015 on a grand larceny charge after he stole the cupcake from a cupcake shop, saying it was too small. He was sentenced to two years in prison. He spent the past two years in juvenile prison, where he was subjected to physical and emotional abuse, he said. "He beat me so bad.... He raped me so many times.... He called me a snitch, a rat, told me I wasn't nothing.... Told me I could never trust nobody again," he says in the video, tears pouring down his face. The night he was released, he took a bus to Queens, where he spent the night under a tree, and then decided
