This program is a stand alone utility, it does not require a Service. Create and open a new or existing Service object. Specify the name and description for the new service. Specify the URL to which ClockWatch will report the status of the service. A status report will be sent to that URL every five minutes. On the Status report page the status of the service is displayed as either operational (green), unavailable (orange) or offline (red). Specify the period at which the status report will be sent. Optionally specify the time to which the report should be compared, as UTC Coordinated Universal Time (UTC-08:00), Local Coordinated Universal Time (UTC-08:00), or some other time zone. Specify whether the service is enabled or disabled (running, offline, etc.) To enable or disable, specify the ON (True) or OFF (False) state. Set the frequency of status report in seconds, minutes, hours, days, weeks, months or years. To specify the frequency, select one of the values from the drop down list box. If desired, you can use the current date and time to set the date and time of the first status report, which will occur in the future. You can select a Time

Zone and a unit for the clock, or leave it as your default. Using the Time/Date picker is the easiest way to select a date and time. Using the Time/Date picker to select a time/date will override the chosen time/date of the service if any. If you want to use an existing date/time, just select it from the drop down list box. Clicking OK will create the service, close the application and display the Status report page. Using the browser to open the Status report page can be used as an alternative to the Window's "Open with" dialog box. ClockWatch Pro also displays a status report page in the Event Log. Select the service from the Event Viewer, click the Status report link and ClockWatch will display the report. For more detailed information about a service, right-click on the service and select Properties. Your feedback is welcome. Please post

However, the API is meant to be consumed by an Android app. The API is not secure and I have not implemented any authentication yet. I am wondering what is the best approach to implementing the login/logout operation (in case I will want to use it). I am trying to avoid saving users' credentials in a database (if there is a way). It is okay to store the user-id in the database, and have the app send the user-id to the API. Should the app then have its own credentials? Should I let the app be the user, and pass the user-id to the API?

Should I use JWT? A: One simple approach is to authenticate the client with the API. Client and the API are two different entities. Clients can connect to the API without any authentication. Since the server can check the authenticated identity of the client, the server can store in its database some state in case of an authenticated client. If you want to store client-specific data in the database, I would advise to do it with an authenticated client. Q: Separating number and text in list item (Codeigniter) I'm making a list of employees in which I want to separate the position of the employee by a colon. The code I'm using is this: position;?>: employee_name;?> This is the data I'm using to display the employee's name and position. What I want is this:
