I'm a believer in the most unlikely of circumstances. That's why I was pleasantly surprised to see that the small stuff' might not be so small after all. After a quick trip to my local grocery store, I was horrified to see my pack of 12, one-ounce bags of black sand (for use in sand art) that I ordered on Black Friday had escaped the sack, leaving me with 1/3 of a bag's worth of sand at home. That's how much the smallest package I could order at the largest retailer was. An empty sack of sand with no stores to check out, no one to open it up with my credit card, and no way to verify if the contents had been tampered with. I didn't want to drive all the way back to the store to get what amounted to less than 3 ounces of sand, but there was no one to call to alert them of my oversight. Neither my local, nor the far flung one would accept my credit card payment. They needed a phone call or fax for that, neither of which I had. I was at a loss. I waited. No one appeared to come looking for the item at the store I'd gone to. I decided to let it ride. I didn't want to drive back to the store on the day of Thanksgiving, not when someone could be dying of food poisoning and I wouldn't have known that they were happy
