A study on the screening for active and latent tuberculosis cases in a school was carried out in a rural area of Shimane prefecture, Japan in March and April of 1990. It consists of two phases: 1) an initial screening for the presence of tuberculous infection cases, and 2) verification of the infection cases. As a result, 67.7% of the junior high school students and 52.9% of the junior high school girls showed TST positive, respectively. From the initial screening, no significantly positive cases were found in any junior high school teachers, and none of the 22 adult residents who lived in the community, who had the history of BCG vaccination and/or TST positive, were found to be positive. From the results of the initial screening, all the 55 positive cases were subjected to the verification of tuberculous infection. Although the results of the IGRA was not useful for the verification of active cases (10 cases with positive interferon-gamma release assay (IGRA) and 13 with negative IGRA), the results of the verification of the latent infection showed that 8 of 15 TST positive cases (53%) and 2 of 3 TST negative cases (67%) with positive IGRA results were shown to be positive by the gold standard method. Therefore, the prevalence rate of active tuberculosis in this area was estimated to be 6.0/100,000, and that of latent tuberculosis infection to be 11.0/100,000. The rate of active tuberculosis in children was 9/100,000 and that in adolescent students was 5/100,000, which are higher than the national average, whereas the rate of latent tuberculosis infection was similar to that of the national average.
