The conditional statement is a statement that is executed conditionally on a condition being met. For example, the conditional statement may include the logical statement IF (condition met) {do something} ELSE {do something else}. For some logic, the condition is based on the result of another logical statement. For example, an instruction to store a value "x" into a variable may be an example of a condition. The logical statement IF (x==0) {y=0} ELSE {y=x} may store the value of "x" into "y" based on a test that the value of "x" is equal to zero. This value is stored into "y" only if the value of "x" is equal to zero. The conditional statement may be implemented in the form of a sequence of instructions.
