Q: Web site vs mobile site What is the difference between the mobile site and the web site? A: Mobile site and web site mean the same thing and have a lot of overlap in their purposes. The biggest difference that I can think of is that a mobile site is optimized for mobile devices (iPhone, Android, smart phones etc) and has larger or more frequent images/content. A web site is a bit more general and has a bit more "desktop" content. Read the article Are we talking about one or two websites? for some more good examples of the differences. A: One thing that you need to take into account in regards to the difference between a "mobile site" and a "mobile app" is the capabilities of the device. By default, I don't believe mobile phones and tablets are able to open up a web site via a browser... they open up mobile apps instead. In essence, "mobile sites" are still web sites. There's just more of the content that's more designable for a mobile device in general, such as larger fonts, more frequent images, smaller images. A "mobile app" is a native application that, by default, only the owner of the application can get to (unless they

Spinal properties of chronic nerve compression. Forty-eight single motor and 12 single sensory nerves from 10 patients with a common compression syndrome (neuropathy) were studied. Spinal mechanical thresholds and temporal summation were measured in each nerve using monofilament (pinprick) and vibratory techniques. Nerve conduction velocities were also measured in selected nerves. Intraneural application of intradermal capsaicin (n = 8) or saline (n = 13) to the ulnar nerve reduced its mechanical threshold by 81% and 36%, respectively (P less than 0.005). During intraneural application of capsaicin, the temporal summation threshold in the flexor carpi radialis muscle decreased by 77% (P less than 0.005). Spinal mechanical thresholds and temporal summation were similar in patients with and without pain. Nerve conduction velocities were normal in the group as a whole but were reduced in the P1 and P2 groups. In chronic compression, intraneural sensitization is related to axonal injury and reduced motor endplate function rather than to increased sensitivity. In addition, a reduction in nerve conduction velocity occurs in chronic compression.

Description of problem: The developers can create a new object in the current revision and thereby invalidate all other committed objects. Version-Release number of selected component (if applicable): How reproducible: Steps to Reproduce: 1. 2. 3. Actual results: Expected results: Additional info: Hello, kind of a weird thing going on here. But I have found a solution. My issue is that I am using a Plone 3.0.3 instance for the CM development on a Ubuntu 8.10 instance. So my problem happens on an open bug. When I was using a Plone 3.0.2 CM instance on a Ubuntu 7.10 instance, this issue never happened. But anyways, the problem was that my database was setup to store ZODB objects (in the Apache db). So I switched it to store only the ZAM-Plone objects (in a MySQL db). And when switching it, it was also switching the order of the ZODB and mysql object stores. This means that all the ZODB objects stored in the mysql store were lost (which is quite normal). So what I

11, 1977. There have been a number of post-release incidents after inmates have been released. The most recent occurred in April of 1978 when plaintiff was assaulted and seriously injured, as a result of which he was hospitalized for more than a month. He was also the victim of an assault in October of 1978. There is evidence that inmate pressures can affect the administration of the penitentiary, but there is no evidence that the defendants acted in any respect that the defendants were negligent. The Court has considered the allegations made by plaintiffs' counsel that defendants have failed to meet their obligation under the Eighth Amendment, cruel and unusual punishment. There is no evidence that prison guards are engaged in willful infliction of pain or suffering upon inmates. The defendants deny this and offer evidence to the effect that they have taken reasonable steps to minimize the risk of harm to the inmates. The Court finds that the defendants have taken reasonable steps to minimize the risk of harm and that the conditions complained of here do not violate the Eighth Amendment. As to the allegation that certain rules are applied in a discriminatory manner, there is no evidence that this is so. The plaintiffs cite evidence that some plaintiffs are "more" than others and that certain rules are more strictly enforced. The policy of the Department on this is to allow for differences as long as they are followed equally. It is the opinion of the Court that the procedures employed by the defendants in the administration of the penitentiary are reasonable and are not intended to cause pain or suffering. IT IS THEREFORE ORDERED that judgment be rendered in favor of the defendants in all respects. Q: Spreading model of BLP across different samples This question was already answered in a different form here, but I am not able to answer a question on my own. I have a dataset consisting of yearly data on 12 different countries for five different indicator variables and a wealth-health index - see here. Here's what it looks like: structure(list(Country = structure(c(1L, 2L, 3L, 4L, 5L, 6L, 7L, 8L, 9L, 10L, 11L, 12L), 1L, 2L, 3L, 4L, 5L, 6L, 7L, 8L, 9L, 10L, 11L, 12L), Label = c("Angola", "Cameroon", "Cape Verde",
