I was looking at the Wikipedia entry for "Dissolution" and learned that it is derived from the verb "to dissolve". But I had no idea where this verb comes from. Is it an old word? I wonder if it has a literal meaning? A: The word "dissolution" comes from the Old French verb dissoudre, from Late Latin dissolvere, from past participle of dissolvere, from dissolvere, past participle of dissolvere. The verb dissolvere is a regular verb and comes from the Latin verb solvere, "to resolve, to make pure, to cleanse". This verb comes from the preposition solvere, "to resolve". The old French "dissolver" is the modern French word and the adverb "dissolument" is its synonym. The corresponding English word is "dissolve", in the sense of "to eliminate the effect of a disturbing influence, or bring back to a state of uniformity". "Dissolution" can also have a meaning of "cleaning" or "cleansing" in a biological context. Gene expression and functions of proteins associated with age-related macular degeneration. Age-related macular degeneration (AMD) is a multifactorial retinal degenerative disease that has become an important cause of visual impairment in the aging population. The pathogenesis of AMD has remained unclear. Recently, we have identified several proteins associated with AMD such as interferon-induced protein with tetratricopeptide repeats 1 (IFIT1), interferon-induced transmembrane protein 1 (IFITM1),
