He says the latest set of results from the nonprofit New York Indicators Project show that while youth from communities of color are jailed at a disproportionately high rate for public urination, arrests for the offense are on the decline. Lander also attacked the de Blasio administration's reform of the Police Officer's Benevolent Association (POBA) as well as the city's controversial stop-and-frisk policies, saying both approaches have not made communities safer. In an op-ed in the New York Post, Lander called on 0cc13bf012

Women who start work later in their lives are happier than those who started working earlier in life and this happiness is linked to lower deaths rates, according to new research. The study by the University of Warwick found that women who start work after the age of 50 are happier and healthier than those who started work earlier. The study also found that when women cease work, their happiness and health declines. Researchers from Warwick's Centre for Life Course Studies say that life course theory suggests that there are underlying psychological processes related to work which tend to lead to later employment for women as well as for men. The authors write that the results suggest that research into women's employment patterns and life experiences may have serious implications for the design and evaluation of interventions to promote women's well-being. story, not just the headlines "Our research argues that interventions that aim to improve women's well-being by encouraging women to start work in mid life will have to consider the possible detrimental effects of such an action on the health and well-being of these women as well as their family members, friends, and communities," said Professor Richard Suzman, who led the study. As well as being happier, women who start work at a later age are less likely to die, and their health is better while they are at work. The authors write that their result supports many previous research findings which suggest that women have more positive health outcomes than men, and that their employment is linked to better health and wellbeing. The study looked at a sample of 2,231 women, aged between 42 and 83. Half the women were between 42 and 50 when they started work, and half were between 50 and 80. The authors write that the link between work and health is not straightforward and in some circumstances actually harmful. They give the example of menopause, which they argue suggests women's well-being is not affected by work, but that men do experience an adverse effect on their health when they cease to work. The
