Q: What to do if a character was cast Raging Tempest on the first turn, and isn't played? A few rounds of Raging Tempest were just played out. One player did not play a creature, she cast one on the first turn, which got hit by Raging Tempest, and is not played due to a catastrophic error, causing the entire board to freeze. It seems fairly fair to me that the player gets to use the card, not the opponent. What should be done in this case? A: This seems like an (unintended) standard board freeze caused by poor communication. Raging Tempest is an instant and effects expire as the timer ticks down to 0, meaning that it will no longer trigger once the counter expires. It also does not have the control keyword, so it will ignore control spells. As such, the best thing to do at this point is to go through and ensure that all spells used on the opponent's side of the table are also resolved. You can confirm this by looking for the "Tapped: No" or "Cards:" No text under the spell. This way, you can make sure that all the spells used on the opponent's turn are in their proper hand so that they can be played. Most likely, it will turn out that there are no major problems with this player's deck, because they will be getting a free card. Try not to focus too much on the blame and punishment game here, though! It's far more important to fix the problem. A: There are no cards that can be freely cast. If you don't think that a card is in the player's deck, you should call for a judge. If they are not sure, and cannot find it, you need to issue a penalty. Under WF rules, if the player
