It is really a very accurate simulator which Disney builds immersive VR headset It's been no secret that it's been working on its VR experience for some time, but what it's been working on is now official: Disney is bringing its Magic Mirror AR glasses to the consumer market. The Magic Mirror will launch on Nov. 15, selling for $399.99. As previously rumored, the device relies on a mobile app to use with it. Disney says that there will be more than 100 apps available, including a version of the iOS game Star Wars: Jedi Challenges, but it also showed off a few other apps, including one where you could hold up your iPhone to your Magic Mirror to watch a short movie and another that lets you place the image from a VR headset over the image from your smartphone. Disney also said that the device will come with a new mobile app, called Disney Plus, which will allow users to "experience a wide range of premium entertainment experiences at home, at work, or on the go." Disney Plus will launch with a free trial, and will eventually be offered for $6.99 a month and $69.99 a year. Disney Plus will include full access to ESPN, Hulu, and ESPN+. Ultimately, the Magic Mirror appears to be a gateway drug for Disney. The company has already said that it will launch its own streaming service in 2020, and Disney Plus will be the first of many services that Disney will offer.
