Teemu Selanne scored one goal and set up another for his former Ducks teammate Teemu Selanne as Dallas won its first game of the Western Conference finals at Nationwide Arena on Wednesday night. Michael Ryder got the other goal for Dallas, which won 2-1 in Game 2 of the Western Conference finals after being stunned in the opener Tuesday at Anaheim. Risk factors for recurrent abdominal pain and severe abdominal pain in children with presumed functional constipation. Recurrent abdominal pain (RAP) and severe abdominal pain (SAP) are common adverse events in children with presumed functional constipation (PCFC). We aimed to evaluate risk factors for RAP and SAP in PCFC children. A cross-sectional multicenter study was performed in four Italian centers. Children with PCFC were enrolled consecutively and underwent a pediatric gastroenterologist's interview and a clinical examination. The presence of RAP and SAP was determined by the Pediatric Gastroenterology Study Group's Rome IV criteria. The patients were observed and followed for 24 months, and the relapse rate was used as the primary endpoint. The study included 294 PCFC children. The mean age was 7.1 (± 3.8) years, girls constituted 63.4% of participants, and 50.3% had previously experienced RAP and/or SAP. A subgroup of PCFC children experienced recurrent abdominal pain and severe abdominal pain; in this group, 25% of children showed social difficulties, 31.4% were obese, and 8.3% had eating disorders; 24.6% had a first-degree family history of depression and/or anxiety; and 6.8% had been previously treated with antidepressants.
