What's new:

We can break up paint and I tried once with light about ten months ago... It was harder than with a sharpie pencil... or even the very fine point of my ol' Flexible Fur Tip Pastel Pencil (darn... I just spilled it on my tile and it's still too wet to quit) and it really gets crazy messy... I also forgot about sketches... That's so unlike me... Let's check out the Channels and Advanced Shape tool... Basic Layer Settings > Channels: You'll remember that the Basic Layer Settings dialog has eight handy checkboxes to help you design effectively. You can set the selected areas on the working layer as transparent or not. You can also set the layer as a "magnifying glass". These and the other handy settings are in the Layers panel which is below: You can set the opacity here... And there are three specific "Color Match" options: These allow you to desaturate colors, make them grayscale and force them to one particular color or a specific number of colors, essentially forcing the selection to a very precise color. You can also set the brightness here: As usual, in the "Layer Palette" section you can select colors, brushstrokes, stencils, layers, glyphs and more... Though not in the image below (sorry) I'd like to mention that this is "User Drawn" settings and not generated by the software... This is where you create the "shape" or whatever you'd like it to be, the lines in this case, or anything else. Advanced: And finally: This I only discovered just before I started writing this post... The "Examples..." is an option for setting settings to live hints or shadows, outlines, and general effects. I will say that I like the "Advanced Options" a lot more than those buttons on the main toolbar (a moving smudge, that moves but doesn't ever attack, paints a shadow when you move it and lifts the original image to the background so you can look at it, etc.) That's for another time. So that's pretty much it for this basic overview of the Channels and Advanced Shape tool to help you get started. Then I realize that I have this "scarecrow" hat and am REALLY feeling like I should do something with it... Do I make a new layer and start

The game will consist of five areas, each area you will be presented with a series of increasing difficulty questions. Each area will be as follows: ■Area 1: "Journey Into The Past", where you will be presented with a list of dates to choose from ■Area 2: "Solve the Rubik's Cube", where you will be presented with a rubik's cube, and you will have to solve it before the timer expires ■Area 3: "Dungeon Escape" where you will have to escape by moving up and down the ladder quickly, if you fall you will lose the game and move on to the next level and if you beat the timer you will advance to the next level and you will be presented with another question. ■Area 4: "The Great Key Challenge" where you will be presented with a puzzle of keys and you will have to solve it to advance to the next level. You will be graded on the speed you solve it with. ■Area 5: "Epic End" where you will be presented with a question that will end the game. There is only one question in this level. It can be anything you want but it's a lot of fun to use a random letter generator or an arabic numeral generator. If you solve all areas on first try you will receive a bronze medal, if you solve all areas in under 10 seconds you will receive a silver medal and you will receive a gold medal if you do it under 9 seconds. My program is a lot less complex than other similar programs as it is easy to produce, very fast and effective. It's even able to generate the images and is very effective in drawing all the graphics. However, I will be adding more levels to increase the complexity, even much more if you will take the time to play this game and let me know how the score that you achieve is. Lets begin!
