Hello there. I'm James, and this is how I ended up building Timefibers. I use Google Chrome for general browsing, Google Sheets for organizing tasks, Sublime Text for code review and writing, and Timefibers for time tracking. All the while, I'm literally standing in front of a monitor most of the time. That's how I work with over 200 hours of programming as a Software Engineer at different companies across the United States. The truth is that, when I sit at a desk and run apps or open up new tabs in my browser, some of my core areas of focus are, quite literally, not the same. It's also a fact that some areas, such as development, require long periods of uninterrupted time. There's no doubt that, for people like me, time tracking is a crucial part of any task. Unfortunately, it is not a tool that, when used properly, is very intuitive. That's why I'm very happy to announce that I'm about to release Timefibers. Timefibers is a super easy-to-use timer tool. As I mentioned, it runs in the background and keeps tabs on your most important activities. And it is very easy to use. No manual input. Timefibers allows you to define all your work tasks and check your performance, so it will automatically log your activities. The goal is to make time tracking as easy as possible, so that you can focus on what really matters. Real-time data. Timefibers lets you check on your activities at any given moment. There are all sorts of data you can check out, like the number of hours you have spent writing code, the number of pages you have visited, etc. What's more, Timefibers will also let you see data accumulated over long periods. Without doing any data search, you can see a lot of detailed information. Examples: By default, the database will track and categorize your visits to websites and apps. But you can define your own categories: 'Productive' 'Distracting' 'Break' 'Meeting' 'Development' 'Interactive' 'Reading' 'Sleep' 'Coffee' You can easily add new categories.

been using the timefiber tracker as I don't want to have to manage this process. So far its been great and the timefiber tracker was easy to setup. There

What's New In Timefibers?

The design of Timefibers was made to provide a single centralized database to track the activities that most people usually do on their computers. All activities you perform on your PC are automatically tracked, which includes your browsing activities, downloads, emails, and events on apps. You can pause your activities at any time, and even set up recurring start/stops. Moreover, you can add as many repeating activities as you want to your list. However, you will have to be careful to avoid duplicating activities across these events. Timefibers features: □ History: timefibers keeps an electronic record of all your current and past activities. You can view all your activities in a date range format, and even add new repeating activities. □ Login: timefibers can be manually initiated as a desktop application when you log in, or automatically initiated as a screen saver. □ Configuration: timefibers allows you to configure the program's behavior to suit your personal needs. You can pause activities that are not relevant to you, or specify an activity's label with a useful summary. □ Interface: Timefibers offers an easy to use, attractive, and straightforward user interface. A data summary panel, a short description panel, and a detailed description are visible at all times.

Timefibers Pros: Timefibers includes a total functional database of your activities, which is more than useful for understanding the purposes of your work. Timefibers can be initiated as a screensaver, which can add a splash of color to your PC. It can also double as a well-functioning auto-logger. Timefibers can automatically start recording your work on startup. Timefibers offers a clean and well-organized user interface. It's simple and functional. Timefibers Cons: Timefibers does not include any malware-protection software. So, your data is entirely at your own risk. Timefibers is limited in functionality and can't be installed if you already have other similar time-tracking applications installed.
