Photodynamic therapy (PDT) is a relatively new and promising anticancer treatment modality. Photosensitizing agents or a combination of both (light and sensitizer) are used as a practical means to achieve desirable photocytotoxicity and greater penetration into solid tumors. The combination of the sensitizer and light has been explored using oligomeric and monomeric peptides based on tryptophan residues as a surface-localized molecular quencher of the photosensitizer in aqueous media. To understand the specific role of protein in this process, we have developed a model peptide system in which the photosensitizer is tethered to a two-letter amino acid code. In this communication, we have designed a peptide (GVGLSG), which contains the tryptophan-derived quenching residue and is known to have selective toxicity to cancer cells. We have coupled a porphyrin derivative, VP-16-TCO, with GVGLSG to develop a new cationic amphiphilic peptide for increasing its accumulation in cancer cells. The photophysical properties of the quenched and unquenched VP-16-TCO in aqueous media are studied. The specificity of the peptide toward cancer cells is demonstrated by achieving cellular toxicity of cancer cells, while unquenched VP-16-TCO shows low cell toxicity. The intracellular localization of the peptide has been studied by fluorescence, confocal, and electron microscopy. These results indicate that the peptide has the potential to act as an effective therapeutic molecule for tumors in the future. Somerset Maugham, first published in January 1916. It is a comedy of manners novel set in London in the late 19th century. It is Maugham's first full-scale novel. The novel is the story of a prospective bride who wants nothing so much as to be rid of her unsatisfactory fiancé, a young businessman from the West Indies named Sandy. This is done by simply leaving him at the altar, and only to find he does not travel alone. Plot summary The novel opens with a description of the "Big House", Ashton and Waverley, Long Island, where Sandy lives. Out of a bored life of trying to please his parents and longing to engage in the illicit arts that he finds so diverting, he had planned to take a little trip to the city, and fulfil a long-cherished and selfish desire - to live the life of a "swell". To achieve this he had taken a cheap room and hoped to use it to his advantage. In the meantime he would look for some rich girl to marry. The first chapter then jumps forward five years, and we meet Sandy in London. Maugham here indulges in some very fine writing: He hadn't been able e79caf774b
