In the laboratory mouse, the temperature-sensitive mouse-adapted influenza virus A/PR8/34 (PR8) represents a valuable tool in the study of the immune response to influenza virus. Although we have been using this virus for several years, the information pertaining to its immunogenicity and the kinetics of its clearance, especially in mice with defective T or B cell function, is largely anecdotal. To address these shortcomings, we have developed a reliable and reproducible in vitro system for studying the immune response to influenza virus. This method combines the immunization of mice, the recovery of virus, and the measurement of virus-specific antibody and lymphocyte proliferative responses. The ELISA component of the system uses intact PR8 as the antigen, and the virus is recovered by cell culture and inactivated by formalin treatment. Analysis of the immune response to this virus is dependent on the recovery of a minimum of 6.2×10^8 infected cells per mouse and the inoculation of 10^4 viable cells. The system has been used for the quantification of virus-specific antibodies in a wide range of mouse strains and for the study of the kinetics of clearance of inoculated virus and protective immunity.

"The great thing is, I feel like I've had a whole offseason to work on stuff and get ready for next season and I should be in pretty good shape," Youkilis said during a conference call Wednesday. Youkilis, who posted an .815 OPS in 191 games in 2015, recently underwent surgery to treat a stress fracture in his left wrist. He is available to return
