"The rights of Uyghurs and other minority groups are still not protected, and ethnic and religious discrimination continues to occur," the influential civil rights organization, the China Human Rights Defenders Committee, said in a statement carried Monday by the official Xinhua News Agency. "To safeguard and enhance the rights of Uyghurs, we call for protection of the rights of all ethnic and religious groups in Xinjiang." Xinjiang is the traditional home of the Uighurs, a Turkic ethnic minority that predates the Muslim faith and is written in the same language as Uzbek, Tajik and other Central Asian languages. It is a majority Muslim region of more than 10 million people in northwest China, bordering the independent nation of Kazakhstan. According to rights groups, authorities often detain Uighurs for even minor offenses like traveling without a government-issued passport, and they have increasingly imposed cultural restrictions on the area, raising concerns about the region's stability.M
