Online The final chapter Category: Media I'm trying to prepare a documentary series about real world online capabilities. I've decided to make it a 15 minute format with animation and voice track, along with some websites. I would like to outsource the creative direction and the animation execution because I need experience in these aspects. For the voice track, I chose MCQ. I will need some extra time to finish the preparation and I might need some additional help in the field of sound engineering. This project is going to be mainly about progression systems. Anyone done on this topic is welcome to become part of this project. I need someone who can: - analyze how progression systems work in the real world to create a simplified version of that system. - collect information about / from progression systems or capabilities. - find us examples of something, a game, a company, a culture that doesn't use any progression system. - explain other missing aspects. A simpler version of Ubisoft Online Gaming System (Partner ANR), revealed in 2012 by Ubisoft studio. It is clearly influenced by the Company of Heroes 2 framework and sample based game design styles. Modifications of the Online Gaming System (OGS) and the Company of Heroes 2 models, sometimes have matching characteristics. Partner ANR: - Season/Rank - Clasification - Progress points accumulate after each training session - Gain XP, items and more on all your nodes, that can be used on each other when you level up. - You progress individually - Combining nodes result in a faster improvement, but higher node costs, or a mix of nodes - You start on level 1 Node 0, gaining XP with every node you reach and battle experience with them. - Players can select the game mode, your role and the node you're applying for. - You gain points for finishing enemies nodes and cards, but not player nodes/troops. - A meter will indicate the priority of the training. Company of Heroes 2 System. - Level - XP - Experience gained - Unit Level and other stats increase - Unit selection and balances are important - Unit roles can define the missions on your own - Node unlock Point threshold, unlock them by defeating Node Gain or Bank Raid (sending to Ops Ark) - Positive/negative/neutral feedback on the node, included in the indicator icon. Wasn't very interesting,
