The present invention relates to an apparatus for measuring a path length of a blood vessel using a laser Doppler flowmeter. A conventional laser Doppler flowmeter has a laser light source, a light emitter for emitting a laser light beam, and a laser light receiver for receiving a laser light. The laser light from the laser light source is introduced into the light emitter. The laser light is emitted from the light emitter in a laser beam. The laser light is emitted along the direction of a flow direction of a blood vessel. The laser light which has passed through the blood vessel is introduced into the light receiver through the blood vessel. The laser light which has passed through the blood vessel is reflected by the blood cell in the blood vessel. The reflected laser light is returned to the light emitter through the blood vessel. This laser light is detected by the laser light
