That statement is true. It allows you to do many things quickly and efficiently. In fact, Photoshop can enable you to do many more things than your camera alone can. But those things don't come naturally. Working with Photoshop to "add" to images requires patience and practice. Before you begin experimenting with this program, you need to know how it works and how to use the tools. Fortunately, your Photoshop primer explains the basics of your workspace, the layers that create your images, and how they work together. You also need to learn to use the tools of Photoshop to add effects to your images — things like color or layer overlays. You can select a spot where color comes from another photo on the same image layer (what the photo `_duplicates_`) or from a different image on a different layer (what it `_replaces_`). In the following sections, you discover how to add and remove elements from photos as well as some tools and techniques for color and layer effects. # Capturing Color The first thing to know about the underlying layers that compose a photo is that they are color. You can use Photoshop's Layers window to view the layers in a photo. Click the triangle icon on the Layers panel, shown in Figure 10-1, to open the Layers panel. Figure 10-1: View your image's layers using the Layers panel. In the Layers panel, the first layer (red in Figure 10-1) is the Background layer. It's the image itself. This layer is the original photo with no alterations or graphics on it.

References Category:Manufacturing companies of Israel Category:Companies based in AshkelonQ: MS-Access VBA function returns #NameError and I can't figure out why I'm stumped as to what I'm doing wrong. When trying to execute this function (there's more code but this is only the part that's giving me issues) it gives me the error 'Undefined variable: dateCell'. I'm pretty sure this is because it can't find the variable "dateCell" (specifically it thinks it's a Function, which is I guess wrong). Function returnDate() As String Dim StrDate As String StrDate = (CDate([dateCell])-Year(dateCell)) & "-" & _ (CDate([dateCell])-Month(dateCell)) & "-" & _ CDate([dateCell]) returnDate = StrDate End Function I've tried declaring the function as dateCell, dteCell, dateCell, DateCell, and a few other variations and all have failed. What am I missing? A: You must declare your dateCell variable as a Public variable; Change Public dateCell As Date To Public dateCell As Date If you do not declare this as a public variable, it will be local to the current module, and the Dim [variable] = [value] line will look for a dateCell variable only within the current module. You can also change the syntax of CDate([dateCell]) to CDate(dateCell) I think that this might be a copy/paste error. -up support programme.
