Vektron Revenge takes you to the year: 1997, the world of VR is in the beginning of its rise. The birth of VR gaming is a great experience and a bit of a disaster as the the world at first wasn't ready to use this new technology as it was not even ready to know what it was. At the beginning of the game, we will have to overcome the fear of the VR technology. Our protagonists will have to control the ship, dodge the incoming enemies, grab the power ups and destroy the obstacles. The objective will be to shoot and destroy all the enemies that appear on screen. Platforms: PC, Windows, VR Developer: Triceratox Release: 19/07/2017 I have the game on my PC and it runs fine, but I'm really not that keen on using it with VR. I'd like to understand more about this before purchasing a new-ish VR headset. I do like VR and I'm eager to play games, but this game feels very... disjointed. It feels like the developers have created a bunch of new environments, but with added wraparound. Can anyone describe what this game feels like to actually be in, or experiences with it? A friend said the game seems to be set in a world where no-one wants to use VR, as they all think they can just play it normally. A: You're not getting the whole effect right now. The main game is played on the main screen, but you may opt to play it in Virtual Desktop mode (in the settings menu). That will present all your displays on the screen. If you switch to it in the settings menu it will show you the following warning: If you accidentally switch to this mode, you'll see two separate screens: the view that's coming from the Vive's internal webcam will be on the front right and the view coming from the tracker on the back will be on the back left. There are also a few black borders to the left and right of the main display. If you're seeing these at the moment, that's because you haven't quite settled in yet. Start over and the borders will disappear. If you do switch to Virtual Desktop, you can choose the aspect ratio you want to play with. I understand that the developers are currently working on improving the interface so you can make this easier to use. Thanks! Great news,

Big Box Heroes is a retro game that follows a little robot named Jumpy as he tries to save the world by hacking and destroying. This game allows the player to choose to play as Jumpy, Robot Chief, or the Robot Engineer as they hack different robots to help Jumpy fight his enemies. To use a hacking ability, players must locate the item in the world and use their original hand and feet to select the action they want to perform (i.e. attack, use a skill, an ability, etc). After selecting an action, Jumpy will perform the hack, which takes him to a new screen where he can control the robot and do his attack. While using an ability requires a certain amount of skill, most of the skills that robots have can be mastered early on. If an enemy is defeated, the player will be presented with a new suit that is more powerful than the one the robot was equipped with. Players will travel through five different locations which vary in appearance and type of robots. When the player completes the required number of robots, they will be able to open up the first boss of the game. Starting next year, drivers in Utah will have to pay $25 every time they pass through a commercial checkpoint to be arrested or ticketed. Drivers will have to show their proof of insurance to be given the exemption, with Utah's highways safety agency reporting that some drivers could lose their licenses if they can't afford it. The Utah Department of Public Safety, in announcing the fine, said that because it's not an expensive road-safety measure that can act as a deterrent, fines will be based on the drivers' income, with fines for low-income drivers capped at $25 a time. The agency is also asking the federal government to help subsidize the fines, with a goal of getting a per-mile fine to $5 within five years. But Utah's effort mirrors the road-safety approach taking hold across the nation, as many states now seek to pass new laws or increase fines to encourage motorists to slow down and pay more attention to traffic laws. About a dozen states have raised their fines or instituted new safety checkpoints as a result of increased concerns about alcohol-impaired driving and distracted driving. In New York, Gov. Andrew M. Cuomo ordered increased traffic enforcement after 4,000 New Yorkers were killed or injured by a driver who was legally drunk in 2014. Last month, the state raised its legal driving limit to c9d1549cdd

Soul weapon/Attack: Score attack is done by getting a certain amount of points during the fight (feel free to stop scoring for a while) The more points you get, the more the "reverie" changes. It is especially useful for a normal wave.It can be used while on the move, or when you are returning to the decision screen after a battle. The control is operated using the right trigger. Enemy counterattack: You can disable the enemy's special action by overcoming the previous opportunity costs.Counterattack is done by getting some points while playing against the enemy. The more the score is, the stronger the attack becomes. You can also start the counterattack by pressing the A button while the enemy is attacking, or sometimes while you are under attack too. The "reverie" can be cleared in one hit by reading a secret message (there are three different ways to do this). Hidden Secret Message Clear: If you touch the screen after hearing the secret message, the visibility of the previous battle screen is cleared. This is not used in the final game. The secret message is always given while the previous battle screen is visible, but you may find it difficult to read it. You can find the secret message by touching the screen with a finger while the previous battle screen is visible. If you ignore the message and touch the screen, the previous battle screen disappears. You can also use the following two methods to find the message. Lasso method: It is done by selecting the enemy with a sword tip. You can select one enemy or both using the joystick. You can also select a specific number of enemies by pressing the left grip button once. If you have selected a specific enemy, you can push the A button to "focus" on that enemy and attack. You can also select the positions at which the attack will be done by selecting the positions with the left grip button. If you do not press the A button when focusing, you will attack the enemy that is in the area you selected at the time of the decision screen. However, if the enemy is in the area you selected, you will attack and avoid the enemy that is in the same area. The number of times you can use this method is unlimited. You can also search all the enemies on screen by pressing the left grip button while moving the joystick with the left stick. However, in this case, you can only attack the enemies you have selected. Lasso-clear method: You can clear the "rever

After the end of Terrace Attack, where we had some struggles and a house vacation/cancer issue, I've been trying to finish off my first year of uni and gain the experience I need to improve and move forward. I've written a lot of stuff here, but most of it hasn't stuck and been really helpful to me. It'd be great if you could read through everything to see what I find useful, though. Thanks a ton. I'm going to stop this introduction with an interesting snippet. I've also resigned from a well known team to go to MinusLast was a community manager for Stars, the team that made me a player, and worked with me personally. He's one of the smartest and most wonderful people I've ever met. We have a lot of history, and through this team he developed a lot of the skills that helped us get to where we are today. Seeing him struggle with the realities of SC2 news was pretty amazing to watch, and even once he's transitioned to a community manager position at Dewalt in the States, he's going to be involved with us still. He's someone I continue to be in contact with, whether it's checking in with him and helping out with anything he needs help with in SKT, as well as working together with Stats on content creation or trying out new stuff together, and we hope to continue to make that a reality. He has massive potential, and I'm still debating whether he's best suited for a leadership role or a more creative role in the community. We'll see where he ends up, but I'm confident he's eventually going to be a big part of the team no matter what. That's me telling you about him. I'm going to stop this introduction with an interesting snippet. I've also resigned from a well known team to go toLifeLilo in the States.It was an insanely hard decision to make and one that was made with my goal of going as far
