A multidisciplinary approach is employed in the study of cerebrovascular response in control, global ischemic, and focal ischemic conditions. The response is assessed with regard to its temporal relationship with the onset of global and focal cerebral ischemia. The effects of pharmacological agents and blood pressure manipulations on the response to global and focal ischemia are investigated. Regional blood flow, cerebral blood volume, and oxygen delivery are used to assess the microvascular response. Both biochemical and histological studies are conducted in order to gain insight into the mechanism of microvascular response to ischemia. These studies will provide information about the cerebral microcirculation and will provide a better understanding of the relationship between cerebral blood flow, blood volume, and metabolism during global and focal ischemia. In addition, insight into the mechanism of microvascular response to ischemia may lead to the development of better neurosurgical procedures.Tag Archives: Great Barrier Reef Undeniably, butterflies and other pollinator species are critical to the ecosystem – and the animal kingdom as a whole. A new study, however, shows that they aren't doing such a great job when it comes to extinction. Researchers from University of Technology Sydney (UTS) and the Australian National University (ANU) have... In a prime example of the impressive biodiversity in Australia's Great Barrier Reef, a new study published today in BMC Biology highlights the threat that climate change and local pollution

The usual way of introducing the particles is to use a metallic capillary of low internal resistance with a slightly conical end, whose axis is not parallel to the axis of the set of capillaries. At the end of the capillary, two electrodes are placed which generate an electron gun and a positive ion gun. One of these electrodes must be formed by a capillary whose axis is vertical. During the internal sputtering process, this axis is normally conical with a slight tilting so as to direct the plasma towards the external wall of the assembly, which is fairly conductive,

It probably stems from my being a kid but back then I always seem to get my head around things when I realise that the course of my life had been decided by a message on a car audio video tape. This was an ad for a family vacay "check out our beach house for only $20 a day...and we have free parking, pool and kitchen...you kids eat for free..." This is what happened to me on that day. I went out and bought a cheap car and went driving around until I found myself in a clear area away from any city. I found a campground with a clearing that had a road and a campground that backed up to a beach. There was lots of equipment, still green and spots where you could see where the grass had been cut. All I knew at the time was that this was where I wanted to be and I decided to spend the next five months there. When I found that out from the tape, I sat down in the car and said, "I'm going to be here for five months and I'm going to do whatever it takes to be here." Everything worked out and five months into that idyllic existence, I suddenly woke up and looked around and said, "I'm going to go back to town and be at work in an office and have a regular life." As a kid, I was kind of an aimless kid. At the time I thought of a direction in my life but I hadn't quite defined it. I had moments of clarity as I was growing up and was told that I had "a gift from God" for doing something and I did it. I never questioned this and only saw myself becoming an engineer. It wasn't until I was about 17 and our group went to Alaska and I was contemplating being a miner. I started thinking about why I wanted to do that and how it was going to get me to where I wanted to be. So when I woke up after five months, that had crystallised in my head and the message I had been hearing
