The Anatomy of a Good First Message
The first message is key: It's the one thing that a prospective client will hear every day. It is the first reflection of the kind of client you want to engage. It's the first initial impression that people see. The first message should be simple, crystal clear, and emotional. It needs to grab the reader's attention and compel them to learn more about you and your business. You need to make sure you nail these three things.

Anatomy of a Good First Message
1. Tell the story of why you exist (why you're a business you can trust)
Some people just have a message that resonates right away with people. They own the problem people are dealing with and people believe them. "If I am
