samples. The measurement of antigens in blood is an important component of the early stages of the diagnosis of many infectious diseases. A simple, sensitive and accurate method for the quantitation of various antigens in serum or plasma is needed. The methods used to date for the measurement of circulating antigens require the use of radioactive label reagents, antibodies to detect antigens of interest or may require extraction of the antigens. We describe a sensitive and robust immunoassay based on the use of tyramide signal amplification. Our assay is specific and sensitive with a wide dynamic range, and the dynamic range is easily adjustable by altering the concentration of the detection antibody. The minimal detection limit is approximately 0.01 ng/ml and the linear range extends from 10 ng/ml to 30 microg/ml. In addition, the assay is simple, rapid, and requires no sample cleanup or extraction of the antigen of interest. Because the system is based on fluorescence-signal detection, it can easily be adapted to read microtiter well plates for high-throughput screens for inhibitors of several target antigen-antibody pairs.

Q: Calling a javascript file from rails I have a controller and a view page. I used jquery UI to make a datepicker. I want to know if there's a way that I can use jquery UI in a separate js file and then call it in my view page. A: Rails can serve up Javascript directly. The default way is to just
