Ankur sharma 12-02 08:42 PM Thanks, Hope you guys check out my blog about immigration reform Piyush Deshmukh 01-13 12:52 PM The Republicans in Congress have no "Compromise" or "Concession" in their tool-box The Republican Party is saying if you want Obamacare to fail, we'll force you to own the consequences. If they really want to kill Obamacare, here's what they should do: 1. Pass a law that removes tax exemption from health insurance companies selling to the individual market. 2. The government should write the bill that provides tax credits to the poor and cheaper coverage for the sick, and should negotiate with the insurance companies how to create the plan. 3. Pass a law giving subsidies only to those who purchase their own insurance, so the insurance companies have to compete against the public plan. Once they make that attempt, all the Republican who want to deregulate insurance, federalize the market, and help the insurance industry move in to tax-exempt status with a nudge from the administration will have to say that they really wanted it. Regardless of the motives, you can't prevent a lawful attempt, and Democrats will likely never pass a public plan, but once Congress takes their turn, the public will get the deal they want, and the Republicans will look like the obstructionists they are. Doing that will let the Republicans say they tried it, and forced the administration to do it. No matter what happens after this, this move is already a win for the Republicans. Doing nothing is likely to achieve the same result in a slightly worse way, and the Democrats will take the blame because they didn't fight enough. If the Republicans do have an objective, it is to repeal
