Auction House Full.Human immunodeficiency virus and hepatitis C virus infections in injection drug users in the United States, 2001-2003. Approximately two thirds of the estimated 2.4 million persons infected with HIV are persons who inject drugs (PWID). Compared with noninjecting persons, PWID are disproportionately represented in the United States among HIV-infected persons and among persons with risk for late HIV complications. Furthermore, they are at increased risk for hepatitis C virus (HCV) infection, a major public health problem because of its major contribution to chronic liver disease and hepatocellular carcinoma. To determine whether the trend toward higher CD4 cell counts among HIV-infected PWID during 2001-2003 reflected the effect of safer injection practices and other factors, we analyzed demographic, behavioral, clinical, and laboratory data on the prevalence and correlates of HIV and HCV infections among 1323 HIV-infected PWID enrolled in seven multi-site studies. A total of 272 (20.9%) were also infected with HCV. Compared with noninjecting persons, injectors were younger (mean age 35.9 vs. 40.4 years), more likely to be nonwhite (71.5% vs. 33.7%), and more likely to report recent (26.9% vs. 7.3%) and lifetime (78.0% vs. 58.4%) cocaine injection. They were more likely to have syringe sharing (21.9% vs. 12.9%), frequent sex partners (79.5% vs. 41.3%), and to have been incarcerated (66.8% vs. 18.1%) and to have mental health (40.2% vs. 15.4%) and physical health (41.9% vs. 17.8%) problems. With respect to HIV-related behaviors, they were less likely to
