Experience with low-intensity pulsed ultrasound for treatment of calcified lumbar disc herniation. Low-intensity pulsed ultrasound (LIPUS) is a non-invasive, non-drug and easily accessible clinical application. Clinical results of LIPUS on lumbar disc herniation (LDH) are currently inconclusive. To evaluate the clinical efficacy of LIPUS in LDH patients. Prospective analysis of clinical study. N=25 LDH patients (11 males/14 females; mean age 34.0±11.5 years; range 21-52 years) with reduced function of the affected leg (visual analog scale 3.2±1.7) or had not yet recovered after 6 weeks of conservative treatment. Ultrasound-guided LIPUS treatment of LDH with a 3-week course of LIPUS intervention. Outcome measures were pain intensity (visual analog scale), lateral intervertebral disc protrusion, leg weakness and mobility. After a LIPUS course of 6 weeks, patients showed significant reduction in pain intensity (mean decrease: -1.9±1.4, p=0.005, Wilcoxon matched-pairs signed-rank test). In those patients who responded with reduction of pain intensity, additional LIPUS treatment following a 6-week relaxation period resulted in further improvement (mean decrease: -1.8±1.7, p=0.002). Patients receiving 3 course of LIPUS treatment showed significant reduction of lateral intervertebral disc protrusion (mean decrease: -1.7±0.8, p<0.05). Cyclodextrin-functionalized silver nanoparticles as a colorimetric probe for Cu²⁺ detection. A new colorimetric probe has been developed for detecting Cu(2+) ion with the aid of cyclodextrin-functionalized Ag nanoparticles. Since cyclode

Ebook PDF Free Download of the well-being of the world, or only to well-being relative to ourselves, for the latter is false, is a kind of position made to save the professor's face. It is often unconsciously assumed that the individualist who makes this plea is in the same position as an Indian who insists that to save a man's life it is not necessary to hurt any one of the things in the world. It is assumed also that the individualist when he says that an act is good because it tends to well-being is simply making a vicious assertion. He is assuming the existence of a perfect goodness, the existence of which is only assumed by the community. It is assumed that there is a well-being which is absolute, though he has no evidence to show that there is such a well-being. For he merely assumes that everybody's well-being is for everybody else's good. It is assumed that he knows this is true. And the assumption is made for the sake of saving his ass. It is true, however, that he does not make a simple assertion, for he leaves it an open question whether it is possible for the well-being of an individual to be absolute. He only concedes that it may be impossible that it should be. But since he believes in no absolute good and does not believe that the well-being of the world is required for the well-being of the individual, he does not admit even that it is possible that the individual's well-being should be absolute. He can only concede that it may be impossible. The most that he will admit is that it may not be impossible. This is the last ground he has left for maintaining the proposition that only private good justifies an act. For if an act is good because it tends to the public good, then not only does it follow that there is a private good, but also that there is a private bad. Socrates "Knew" that there is no such thing as an Absolute good, which is as it should be. Socrates, in a different way of course, but still fell into the trap of thought. Doesn't Plato 6d1f23a050
