"We have been very patient and we have been waiting for the response from the Syrian government," Mark Kaufman, a spokesperson for the EU's diplomatic service said. Meanwhile the Russian deputy foreign minister, Sergei Ryabkov, said, "We believe it is really a broad-based revolution being promoted in the Arab world. This is a sign of the beginning of the Arab Spring." That latter comment is in reference to a televised call from Shi'ite Iraqi cleric Muqtada al-Sadr to his followers to rise up against the US occupation in Iraq and to the Saudis to incite their Shi'ite population against their own monarchical rulers. The Russian statement, however, is full of ambiguity, saying that the EU "is deeply concerned by the massive loss of life and damage to civilian infrastructure" of which the regime is responsible. The US and the EU have been completely silent on the US activity in Syria, which has been creating a sectarian civil war with the main opposition group being Al Nusrah. Syria's Sunni population has rebelled against their government, which is dominated by the Alawi sect, a sect of Shia Islam. Al-Nusrah is a Wahhabist group, and is a terrorist organization, operating against the Syrian government. The US and the EU have expressed condemnation of the violence against Syria, but they have never acted to put an end to the flow of arms to the rebels, nor have they condemned the occupation of lura. The EU's inaction is even more remarkable when it has sided with the US in condemning Russia's intervention in Georgia, as well as its invasion of Ukraine. The EU's 6a93da74d
