activate:.Phase II trial of hyperbaric oxygen in systemic sclerosis. To determine the effect of hyperbaric oxygen (HBO) therapy on the severity of pulmonary fibrosis in systemic sclerosis (SSc). Thirty-three patients with SSc with diffused skin fibrosis and progressive pulmonary fibrosis were randomly assigned to a placebo or HBO therapy group. Patients received 10 treatments of 1 hour of 100% oxygen at 2 atmospheres absolute (ATA). Treatments were given twice weekly for 4 weeks and then once monthly for an additional 16 weeks. Chest radiographs were scored by blinded observers using a modified Gorham scoring method for a maximum of 96 points, and diffusing capacity was measured by standard spirometric methods. Over a period of 1 year, the placebo group showed a statistically significant improvement in disease severity that was not seen with the HBO therapy (PQ: Is there a practical difference in how these sentences are understood? I'm having trouble seeing why "I have come to ask whether they can grant us permission to leave the country" is not interpreted as "I have come to ask whether they can grant us permission to leave the country at this moment" or, "I have come to ask whether they can grant us permission to leave the country at this moment," is not interpreted as "I have come to ask whether they can grant us permission to leave the country at this moment." (Of course, I am aware that in both sentences, it is the that clause that can also be completed after the past tense.) (The situation seems so similar to me that I am almost to the point of believing that I have misinterpreted it.) A: I think you're asking why both sentences
