February 12, 2012 â€” Pre-medical (often shortened to pre-med) is a term used to describe a track that an undergraduate student studies before becoming a medical student. Pre-med usually starts with a few subjects such as English, Chemistry, Biology, Anatomy and Physiology. This is one way to find yourself, to understand if the student really wants to become a doctor or if he just wants to study medicine, trying to understand how the world works. A medical student who studies Pre-med can choose from a wide range of courses, from chemistry to laboratory science, from neuroscience to molecular biology, and from anatomy to histology.
