May 20, 2015 â€” In this simulation, Just Flight captures the Spitfire as it was, perhaps at the most important stage of its development - in the early years . This image shows how the Spitfire may have been designed to fly into the cockpit and attack using the side air intakes. The image allows you to see that the engines could be raised to a height, and the air intake was above the top engine. In addition to this, you can see that the air intake has a V shape. You can check out the simulation here - . The simulation shows that Spitfires, like all previous ones, were supposed to attack from a low altitude. 0946cee1be
