it was perhaps not surprising that bhatt was attracted to the title story he had read in das weekly. the romantic drama revolves around a young boy obsessed with his precocious mother, who discovers the truth about his parents and learns to forgive them. he is the son of nanabhai bhatt, a successful businessman who is a known womaniser. he is first introduced to the film with his father stepping in before the birth of his third child. he then goes to bombay to join his friend bhautesh (ajay devgn), who is a successful broker. here, he is taken under the wing of the bhatt family and soon has a taste of the luxuries of the elite. he is also introduced to his stepmother, shirin, a feminist lawyer, who has been the target of his father's infidelity. for balan, whose hindi films have all won a couple of prizes at the filmfare awards, this is a chance to work with her long-time actor friend hashmi. she plays the wife of the bhatts, who is divorced from her musician husband, his first wife who remarried after he left her and has three children. as befitting her position in the family, she walks in the best shoes in town. having asked suri to remain in bombay so that they would have time to collaborate, they watched dozens of bollywood and regional films before putting their script together. at one point, they realised they needed the 'filmi' dialogue for them to be believable. for the title song, they turned to mohammed rafi and asha bhosle, who were two of the most famous singers in the business. rafi was his mentor for the song, which was good to hear the duo reunited. for the set pieces, they used costumes from pakistan, russia, italy and india. as there is no screen play to crib from, they just sat and allowed the camera to take over.
