Heuryou tells him that she and everyone else except Margiana felt they couldn't wait to see him. He tells them to be safe, then runs towards the city. At the city, he says goodbye to Heuryou and the guards. After speaking to them, he heads back to the dungeon. Shabaz and Margiana take him to Margiana's room. Later, he calls Akababa to apologize for his young childish behavior and says that he wants to see Margiana again. He instantly regrets his statement when Akababa says he can't hear his voice anymore, because he's at Margiana's side. Koumei is shocked to hear about the situation, but Heuryou tells Akababa that there is no hope. Akababa asks Koumei if he wishes to die or if he has found any meaning. Koumei replies that he wants to save himself and his subjects, but his people don't understand that is what Akababa says that Koumei tells her and ordered them to killing everyone and that his people then can choose other than to die. Koumei explains that his people will go forward only when all the masters are dead. Akababa says he can't let Koumei go, but Koumei insists that he wants to die. [332] Koumei thinks about what will happen if he dies. He thinks that every country would start fighting over such an issue and that the Imperial Palace will no longer support him. He knows that the International Alliance will not have long to reach for his plan, so he concludes that he will open the way to Bahadur by revealing the truth to his people, unless he completes his plan successfully. [333] He tells Akababa to focus on Bahadur, which Akababa says he's concerned about his friend, who is now in a critical state. Koumei asks that if he wants to protect him, then he needs to succeed. Koumei then wonders if their way is the only correct one. Koumei is under the impression that he is looking for a way to understand the meaning of life, but when he asked Akababa about it, Akababa stopped him. However, Koumei thinks he should have listened to him earlier, because he believes that Kio wants to kill him and that this is just an illusion.
