We welcome people from all around the world to visit India. Our tourist numbers are increasing each year, which allows us to share our culture, history, and cuisine with more and more people. We hope that all visitors are kept safe and healthy while travelling to India in 2020 and beyond. Crack in the World is a fairly simple map. There are three different objectives to the map, but only one of them can be completed without using the redstone. The objective is to find the powerplant, and damage it in a way that generates lots of redstone. Many people like to play on Minecraft PE, but with the PES Mapper resource pack, you can play on any server and play as either your character, or any other entity, and so have a great time in that manner. The goal is to take over the entire island, and claim it for yourself, while others are left completely out. One of the best aspects of Minecraft is the ability to play around with it to create different looking worlds, and even different environments, but in Crack in the World, this ability has gone to the extreme. There's been a heap of comments about this map not fitting the mould that Minecraft is known for, and I can see why. Minecraft is and always will be about having fun, but I hope you can see the genius in that quote that I have used in the title of this post. It speaks volumes of the incredible work that Alan Turing did, and a real testament to the amazing amount of intelligence there is in the world. This map contains a lot of new items and features, and it is possible to make some incredibly cool things in it. If you're playing on a server, you should make your own house or create a new world to fit in with the rest of the community. I've outlined the potential uses of this map, but there is a lot that you could do with this map if you wanted to.

The questions are posted on the world map (click on a question for it). You have to look on the right side of the map, and look for your own name, and click on it. Click 'Mark As Played' if you get all the questions right. If you don't, try another question. Each question is worth 100 points. If you get all the questions right, you get 500 points. The questions are actually multiple choice questions, and there is only 1 right answer. First of all, you can look at this link for more information on the map, or you can view the thread on MCInside . Here are some things that should be kept in mind when you create your own texture packs: Limit the height and width of your maps to a narrow line. For the European setting, this is 8 blocks. The reason is that the terrain within those 8 blocks are the most visually interesting. However, since the width of the map is 8 blocks, a room that is 16 blocks wide needs to be split into 16 smaller rooms and reused as a texture and layout. Do not use layers without a reason. If you use a layer, you can create a complete area of textures. Do not put a texture as a resource pack. This will not work and there are more stable ways of adding textures to the world. Add the necessary tags to your textures. If you are not using the world tags (like minecraft_solar system_city), add the tags related to your texture. Do not over use the same texture in the same area. It takes too much time and resources and can look silly. Plan the use of your texture. Keep in mind that a map with more than 150 unique textures is pretty hard to generate and harder to use with more than two people. The land can be divided in to regions based on the size of areas and the amount of different kinds of world features. You may want to add a “blank” landmass or have more than one set of identical landmass. Have fun and make the most impressive texture pack! :D
