the escalating global coronavirus pandemic has raised the need for international coordination among nations to ensure appropriate funding for research and development (r&d) for drugs and vaccines. this was underscored in early march, when the world health organization (who) declared a global pandemic in relation to the coronavirus, which at that time had killed more than 2,900 people and infected more than 170,000 people. many of the factors that are contributing to the spread of the virus and the fast-spreading of the epidemic are rooted in public health failures in the first half of the twentieth century. for instance, the absence of effective international cooperation has limited the availability of critically needed medical supplies and the development of a vaccine. in the 1990s, many countries established laws allowing them to take back their citizens from other countries that are unwilling to accept them. in recent years, the take-back phenomenon has caught the attention of the media. however, where the stories focus is a little different. why? the nations with laws allowing them to take back their citizens are usually wealthy nations, while the countries from which they are trying to take back their citizens are mostly poorer nations. the media stories tend to focus on the affluent nations taking back their citizens, and the stories almost never focus on the citizens being removed from their countries. like many other things, timing is important. if the email was sent out too early, it could be a source of frustration and annoyance. and if the email was sent out too late, it may not seem relevant and may be ignored. 5ec8ef588b
