Taking matters on a separate front, Photoshop 5 has a set of new tools that may be useful to those with very specific needs. Photoshop still comes with the most marketable tools, such as exposure controls and correction features. But there are other tools that may be more beneficial to some people. People often ask us what things we think will be there in the next major release of Photoshop. In general, we have a good idea, based such a large number of results from users voting on which features they find less important, such as the addition of some sort of scanner. As I noted before, we think that opens the door to a lot of new possibilities. I mean, it may be a conceptual leap, but if we can import multiple Devices in Lightroom, we can do the same thing in Photoshop. It's the most advanced version ever!

I have only made few adjustments in this product.

I would like to know what is the rate of delivering updates for Photoshop?

I have been waiting for so long for everything to be updated.

This is the first time I have used this product.

I am an experienced photoshop user and this is the first time I have used this program!

I downloaded the trial version, but have not opened it yet, so I am curious of how easy vs. difficult it is to use!

It is my understanding that a tutorial had to be purchased in order for me to use the program without something going wrong.

Is this true?

Also, what would I look for if I wanted to use a tutorial?

To describe the clinical characteristics of hand and arm paresis associated with antecedent peripheral nerve injury. We performed a cohort study of 150 patients with upper extremity nerve palsies attending a Veterans Affairs Medical Center (VAMC). Demographic and clinical data were abstracted from the medical record. Disabilities of Arm, Shoulder, and Hand (DASH) scores and pain intensity were assessed with patient self-report. Patterns of referral were evaluated, and the relationship between upper extremity nerve palsies and peripheral neuropathy was assessed. Odds ratios and logistic regression models were used to assess for associations between potential risk factors and paresis. A referral pattern suggestive of chronic constriction injury was present in 72.6% of upper extremity nerve palsy patients. Of note, only oral anticoagulant therapy was a significant risk factor for upper extremity nerve palsy after adjusting for other covariates (adjusted odds ratio [OR], 2.0; 95% confidence interval [CI], 1.2 to 3.5). Of the 159 patients with peripheral neuropathy present, 61.9% had paresis with 29.8% having neuropathic symptoms and 31.1% fibromyalgia. Substantial upper extremity paresis occurs at a rate of 13.3 cases per 1000 person years at a VAMC. Anticoagulants may be a risk factor for upper extremity nerve palsy. Our findings suggest that upper extremity nerve palsies are often misdiagnosed or under-diagnosed as they lack the characteristic findings of peripheral neuropathy.
