The first area we want to focus on is the Edit Tool. This is the first tool you'll use to edit your photo, generally. The Edit Tool is divided into two sections called Selection and Lasso. The Selection Tool is a selection tool. The Lasso Tool is a brush responsible for selection. Both of these tools work exactly the same way. Let's focus on Selection first as it is the most fundamental tool. The first step to begin editing any photo is to activate the selection tool on top of the tool bar. Then you'll want to create a selection by clicking on your image and holding down the shift key to narrow to your desired selection, drag once or several times to fully make your selection. Then once you have your selection click in the exact place that you'd like to start editing. As you begin to select your photo with your selection tool, you should see a white line appear on your image. This line is your selection border. The next step is to start with a fresh new layer and fill it with a darker color using the Paint Bucket tool. Once you've filled the selection, it is time to start editing your photo. When your selection is sufficiently filled in you'll want to start making your edits using the Selection Tool. You'll use the different selection tools to change the intensity of your selection. There are 3 different tools in Photoshop that will work best for a particular task. The Rectangular Selection Tool allows for you to select a number of squares or boxes from your selection, the Elliptical Selection Tool allows you to select a curved line into your selection, and the Magic Wand Tool allows you to select your selection from your image. Once you've selected your selection using the Selection Tool you'll want to click on your image and press the delete key to delete your selection. Once you've deleted your selection, it is time to start editing. e3d0a04c9c
