In version 2.0, "Version Control" allows the application to keep track of images, "Photostream," or folders containing large numbers of images (thousands and millions of images). By clicking on the Mail icon, you "export" photo lists to Adobe Acrobat, and can then transfer the lists of images to email, import them into the client, and then work with them as Lightroom does with catalogs. In version 4, Adobe added this new function. It already features collection-level tagging, and now it also features a facility to tag photo libraries, so that Lightroom can detect the folder's contents. Any changes made to a file in Lightroom can be synced to the same file in a different folder on the hard drive. This means that you no longer need to manually move files around to keep two copies in sync.
